Leave No Man or Woman Behind: Outreach's Commitment to Serving Veterans

"Leave no man or woman behind."

Variations of this quote are found in the Soldier's Creed for all branches of service and imbedded in our programs and services for veterans here at Outreach. We are committed to ensuring that every veteran who comes through our doors knows that we are here to support them through their recovery journey and transition back to civilian life.

Men and women who have served this country and are in need of drug and alcohol treatment deserve a specialized treatment approach that is uniquely designed for them. Their experiences, communication styles, and distinctive set of traumas, call for counselors who can speak their language. At Outreach, our dedicated staff of treatment professionals include those who are veterans themselves. Their shared experience lends credibility for veterans, and helps them feel comfortable in their treatment environment, and therefore increases the likelihood that they will complete their treatment program.

As a behavioral health provider, Outreach is committed to using the latest evidence-based practices in our services for veterans, including Seeking Safety which focuses on PTSD, Strength of the Struggle, Trauma-Informed Care and more. Our Outpatient program for veterans offers both individual and group therapy sessions, as well as case management and vocational services, where we address drug use, co-occurring issues, and life skills deficits. The focus is not just on past traumas but also on grounding and identifying coping skills on how to heal from those traumas.

Our Outpatient program houses a veterans' lounge which provides a quiet and supervised retreat where veterans can search for jobs, and socialize and connect with other veterans. Most of the group sessions for veterans are held in the veterans' lounge, and discussions range from relapse prevention, to mindfulness, to emotional regulation, grief and loss, and creative arts therapy.

Outreach recently welcomed a new fulltime Veterans' Counselor, Danielle "Dani" Koulermos, to help facilitate groups and administer art therapy. According to our Outpatient Services Director Thomas Olivo, "We felt Dani was our missing link. We are thrilled to have her onboard and deepen the work with our clients who are veterans."

Dani Koulermos shared that oftentimes after discussing their feelings and past trauma in groups many veterans find it hard to identify the language to explain why they feel a certain way. Art offers a way to express something that has happened to them or is happening in the moment, without having to use words and share too much about their past. "Clinical art therapy is a growing modality within the mental health umbrella which services allow people to create rather than speak," says Koulermos. "Art can be anonymous so whether the barrier is shame, confusion, memory loss or just lack of words to describe what we have lived through. Art making allows the vessel to process trauma with a clinician in a safe space without using triggering details of storytelling." Art therapists who practice trauma informed care can help direct veterans suffering from PTSD graduate to post traumatic growth by using psychoeducation to help teach and learn about their emotional triggers, creating their own personal narrative, and encouraging acceptance by being open and honest about their recovery. Art therapy is very versatile because you can choose so many different mediums like music in song writing, passages from books, motivational speeches on audiobooks as well as the traditional tools like drawing, painting, and sculpture. Utilizing art therapy, the clients have the autonomy to choose what they would like to use and what they feel comfortable exploring. For our clients at Outreach, and veterans alike, choice is something that they have not always had throughout their lives, whether it be in the military following orders, being incarcerated, or addicted to substances itself. So having the choice over which medium to use or what they design is paramount in their recovery to make good decisions and trying new things."

Veterans can also take part in Outreach's new 16-bed intensive residential treatment program which is centered around the evidence-based Rehabilitation to Care practice. The program, which lasts approximately 28 days (though the length of stay is ultimately based on the individual's needs) offers the skills necessary to establish sobriety. Upon completion of the program, veterans are referred to the next appropriate level of care, either residential living or outpatient treatment. All options are explored, discussed, and determined in collaboration with the client to ensure that they are fully engaged in the continuation of their recovery. Clients also have access to veteran support groups and community resources through Outreach. These services include referrals to agencies that can help them overturn an dishonorable discharge status in order to be eligible for military benefits.
